Health and Beauty

Have you tried on your bathing suit for the first time this season? If you have, chances are good, judging by the American average, you have decided something must be done about those extra pounds you put on during the winter.

You can look forward to enjoying your diet for it if you choose the right kind of diet. It need not be a lettuce-leaf and carrot-juice affair.

The best way to burn up fat is to step up your metabolism. The way to do that is to include lots of juicy steaks, thick lamb chops, and sizzling (lean meat) hamburgers in your diet. Other important items are fresh eggs, vegetables and fruits.

If you are on the right type of diet, the food you eat will provide the energy you need without adding more fat in the process.

Providing you are in good health, after a few days of a metabolism diet, you will feel better than you have for sometime.

Drink plenty of water between meals. Cut down on your salt intake if you use too much to season your food. This is important because salt tends to cause your tissues to take on added water. Take your vitamin pills if you think it necessary.

Use a non-caloric sweetener in your morning coffee and in cooking. Skim milk or buttermilk (without butter globs) can be a big help. Eat only a very small amount of fat of any kind, including butter. Fat has more concentrated calories than any other food.

Take a healthful amount of exercise. Concentrate on your bad features, such as large hips or legs.

About The Home

One of the most important functions of a home is to turn out happy, well-adjusted children, who will in turn make a home of their own. Any parent who wants to prepare a son or daughter for success in the world and success as a husband or wife might well concentrate on these measures.

1. Set a good example for your children to follow. Let them see the happy behavior of their own father and mother.

2. Let the children take an active and important part in the work of their own home, from early childhood onward. A young child will take a great deal of pride in doing even the simplest chore. It will give him a feeling of importance and help him to develop a sense of responsibility. Do not expect too much of your children, for this will make them nervous.

3. Make sure you are giving your children a sound and accurate attitude toward sex from infancy onward.

4. As they grow into adolescence, make every effort to see that they have friends of both sexes and plenty of opportunity to meet with these friends informally, to work together as well as play together. Let them feel free to invite their friends into their home.

5. Have some form of entertainment that all the members of the family can join in. Music is a perfect topic of mutual enjoyment. Always include the children in on vacations. A family vacation to the beach or mountains once a year will add to the enjoyment of all.

6. Be understanding. Be fair and always consistent. Children understand this type of treatment. When it is necessary to punish them, make sure they understand that the punishment is fair.

EGG-EATING HABIT COSTLY IN FLOCK

Hens not only lay eggs . . they sometimes like to eat them.

Denver D. Bragg, poultry specialist at VPI, says the trouble may start when eggs are accidentally broken in open nests, or one or more hens may deliberately break an egg to eat it. Once the trouble begins it may be hard to stop. The best preventative is to have enough nests—(1 to every 4 birds) and partially darkened nests which contain plenty of good, clean nesting material.

It is also often desirable to try to pick out and remove from the flock the few birds that are deliberately breaking sound-shelled eggs. Try to see that the hens produce eggs with sound shells, since almost any chicken will eat an egg once it is broken. Soft - shelled eggs are usually result of too little calcium or vitamin D in the ration. They can also be caused by abnormal conditions of the shell-secreting part of the oviduct, by bronchitis, and Newcastle disease, and to some extent by age. Hens that have been laying 8 to 12 months often lay eggs with much thinner shells than they did when they first started producing.

Feeding a well - balanced ration with plenty of vitamin D and calcium, and oyster shell free-choice, as well as keeping younger layers, may help reduce or get rid of the egg-eating habit. Also provide plenty of floor space, feed a little grain in the litter to help keep the birds busy scratching, and feed small amounts of good alfalfa hay or some other green feed.

Fashion Show

The teen-ager is very fashion-conscious. At this tender age it is important for growing girls to have the right kind of clothes. This doesn't mean expensive clothes or clothes that are correct in the eyes of their parents. It means clothes like those the rest of the "crowd" wears.

Fortunately, designers have begun thinking about our teen-agers. Consequently, their clothes are a far cry from the sloppy sweaters and the dirty saddle shoes that were a "must" twelve years ago.

The big favorite for school wear remains a sweater and skirt, but they are becoming neat and stylish and designed to look good.

The choice of evening dresses and "dress-up" clothes is varied. The main fight most mothers have is to keep their daughters from wearing clothes too old for them.

Brassieres and panty-girdles with the youthful figure in mind are made by almost all of the foundation companies.

Even costume jewelry scaled for young girls can be found.

Door For The World

Lesson for March 27, 1960

ADS ON billboards, in buses, in newspapers, tell us to Go to Church. A fleet of taxicabs will, if paid enough, carry posters telling the world that "The family that prays together, stays together." Some of this advice must be taken, to judge from the crowds one sees coming out of churches of all kinds. Our country may not be a maturely Christian country, but at least the church is respectable, and popular besides.

Dr. Foreman

This is not true all over the world. There are more places where this is not true, than where it is true. In East Germany today a boy or girl comes near losing all chance of a job if he or she does not leave the church and join the youth organization sponsored by the Party. In Japan, India, and other countries, to be a Christian is to be thought of as unpatriotic.

We Have Always Had Rivals

America is one of the few places now where Christianity is both popular and respectable. These other places where it is not are more like the situation when the Christian faith was new. Many American Christians have the curious idea that if the going is rough we should not send missionaries; that if there are lots of religions in a country like India, for instance, we should not upset their theological apple-cart and confuse them with a new religion. The real New Testament Christians would have thought such notions rather ridiculous. It cannot be said too often: The Christian religion did not get its start in a religious vacuum. Everybody had religion—of some kind. Only, most of the kinds were bad, and the good kinds were not good enough. Christians did not propose to merge with other religions, they urged men to "turn from dead idols to the [not "a"] Living God." The "Gospel train" has never tied in with any other.

A Door for the Word

Christianity, in other words, is exclusive. But it had amazing success in that world so crowded with religions. And this was because Christians like Paul never failed to take advantage of any door for the Word that stood open. Paul, while a prisoner at Rome, had what most modern preachers would consider a bad situation. He was drawing no salary, he had no church" as the saying is, he could not look forward to promotion, he could not do any organizing, his only "parish" was a jail and jails don't offer much in the way of a future. And what a congregation! Criminals and prison guards—not much hope there. Yet Paul could write to his friends at Colossae about a "door for the word." He did not expect a door for himself, but he did pray for one for the Word of God.

His prayer was answered, too. One of the doors for the Word was the conversion of a runaway slave called Onesimus. Through this man the religion of Jesus spread where Paul himself could not go. Then at the end of Paul's letter to the Philippians, written from a Roman prison, he speaks of the "saints in Caesar's household,"—palace servants no doubt. Paul would never have been invited to the royal palace; but these humble Christian men and women, whom Paul had probably converted in prison, since he had no chance to go anywhere else—these would take the Word where Paul could not hope to go.

And If He Does?

There must have been times when even for the Word there was no door that Paul could find. So it is in many parts of the world today. Nobody is expecting any great outbreak of Christianity in East Germany or Japan or Yemen or some places on the Amazon. When all doors are closed, as they are now in China, what do we do next? Do we write off missions as a lost cause? Paul did not. He wrote to his friends at Colossae to pray that God would open to him a door for the Word. You do not pray for what you already have. So now, when doors are shutting in many lands, we are poor Christians if we just accept this as final. For Japan, for Russia, Abyssinia—yes for Suburbia, that often pagan land, we must pray for the open door.
